Need to study up for your SATs so you can get into a great school? Kahn Academy is a free online personalized learning resource for all ages that offers practice exercises and instructional videos.

UP NEXT is a free texting tool that offers personalized support with college search, application, federal student aid, and loan repayment through automatic text reminders.

The U.S. Department of Education has a college search tool called College Scorecard, and the American Association of Community Colleges has a community college finder tool that may be helpful to students interested in a 2 year degree program.

I'm First! is an online community celebrating and supporting first-generation college students.

New Hampshire students previously in DCYF foster, relative, residential or shelter care placement should review the resources available from the New Hampshire Department of Health and Human Services and the Students Transitioning and Achieving Results program.

Searching for Scholarships

Your college is the first place you should connect with when seeking financial aid. In addition to financial aid packages, many schools also offer talent scholarships that typically require a separate application. Head to your high school's guidance office and the local library to ask about local scholarship availability. You can also look for leads on local scholarships at rotary clubs, women's organizations, and your town's chamber of commerce.

Some employers offer tuition assistance for their employees, and sometimes even their employees' dependents. Ask your employer as well as the employers of your immediate family members what educational resources they have.
